Text Editor is a free and simple to use text editor for windows. It works exactly as notepad, except that it allows you to save text files in the compressed.zip format. A Calgary police officer arrested and suspended for his role in what has been dubbed "battalion beatings" has a history of racist incidents. A coalition of local human rights groups is calling for the officer, who has not been publicly identified, to be fired. "I am ashamed of him. Just disgusted with him. It just goes to show that ... when we have police officers like that in this city and they're doing police work, they're supposed to look after the public, make sure everybody is safe," said Stacey Potter, the executive director of the Canadian Federation of Central Calgary Aboriginal Peoples. "He's just failed to uphold his duty." The group's calls for the officer to be fired were echoed by the Alberta Justice and Solicitor General. "We are committed to ensuring public trust and confidence in the Calgary Police Service. It's extremely disappointing that this has happened and we're reviewing it and we'll take the appropriate action," said provincial spokesman Tim Danson. In a statement, Chief Brian Hamilton of the Calgary Police Service said the officer was suspended without pay until his conduct is investigated by the police complaints commissioner. "As a police service, we have an obligation to do our utmost to build trust with the public, and serious allegations like these can create an environment where police can no longer be effective. This cannot be allowed to continue in any shape or form," Hamilton said in the statement. "Our police service values diversity and has been a strong advocate for racial justice for decades. We need a police service that is reflective of all Calgarians and this must be a priority in our continued commitment to being a service we can all be proud of." The allegations against the officer have not been proven in court. The officer has been released without charge and is scheduled to appear
